FROM THE CHAIRPERSON

The end of the year is upon us. Good luck with all the deadlines and commitments that you still need to meet in 2016. It is with sadness in my heart that I have to announce that Professor Anthony Minnaar has completed his extended term as editor in chief of ACTA. He indicated to me that he will not be available for another term. Let me use this opportunity to thank Professor Minnaar again for all his valuable work with our journal over the past few years. At the council meeting of 28 October 2016 we acknowledged Professor Minnaar with a farewell function and a gift from CRIMSA.

At the same time I am happy to announce that Professor Lillian Artz from the University of Cape Town has accepted a five-year term as our new editor-in-chief of CRIMSA's Acta Criminologica journal. Prof Artz is an acclaimed scholar and well known to most. She has many new ideas such as implementing an online submission system and to increase ACTA's impact factor. I am sure Professor Artz will add tremendous value to our journal and our overall standing. Thank you very much Professor Artz for accepting this position.

I am also enthused to welcome back Dr Francois Steyn from the University of Pretoria as a sub-editor of ACTA. Dr Steyn (soon to be professor) will also join us from 1 January 2017 on the editorial team of ACTA. Thank you, Dr Steyn, for your willingness to join us in this capacity. Also we have assigned Professor Jaco Barkhuizen to investigate all possible options and avenues with regard to professionalisation of Criminology and all its sub-disciplines. We have shifted the focus from professionalisation to the option of "registration as a practitioner". In effect it is the same process but some members have strong feelings about the concept "professionalisation". Thank you, Professor Barkhuizen for your willingness to take on this task. Furthermore, Professor Cornelis Roelofse from the University of Limpopo was mandated at the last council meeting to start a process of negotiation to explore the possibility of offering services to the African Union (AU) through acquiring observer status to the AU. Also thank you, Professor Roelofse for this initiative.

We have selected a Biennial Conference Committee (myself, Proff's Ovens, Prinsloo, Roelofse, Luyt and Barkhuizen as well as Ms Van Jaarsveld and Ms Thobane) at the council meeting and we have started with the conference arrangements for 2017. At this stage we plan to host the conference in the Johannesburg area from 2-4 August 2017. Details will follow early next year. The CRIMSA council and invited members will also attend different critical planning sessions from 23-27 January 2017.

Best wishes to everyone and please travel safely during the festive season.

Christiaan Bezuidenhout

FROM THE EDITOR

As the year draws to a close and most academics are buried up to their neck with marking examination, we can all admit that 2016 was (due to the #Fees Must Fall campaign) not the easiest academic year. Nonetheless, amidst all the challenges faced this year it is evident as was reported in the previous 2016 CRIMSA News editions that we as practitioners and academics in the Criminology and Criminal Justice field have reached greater heights in the last three quarters of 2016.

This third edition of CRIMSA News is not any different from the other editions in that it is also packed with news and momentous contributions being made by our colleagues both locally and internationally. Important to note is a section towards the end of the newsletter titled “Call for papers & trainee/work/scholarship funds applications” which provides readers with information on calls to either submit papers to peer reviewed journals or applications for scholarships, jobs or funding.

I would like to extend my sincere gratitude to members and institutions who contributed to this edition. Please remember that all correspondence related to the newsletter should be emailed to: kwadims@unisa.ac.za.

72ND ANNUAL MEETING OF THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF CRIMINOLOGY (ASC): THE MANY COLORS OF CRIME & JUSTICE. NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, USA. 15-19 November 2016

Prof Anthony Minnaar attended the 2016 ASC conference held in New Orleans and presented a paper (co-authored with Mr Willie Clack) titled: Rural crime in South Africa: Searching for explanations. While only 15 minutes is granted a presenter in each session (of five presenters), the value of attending such a conference is in the opportunities for extensive networking with academics and researchers that have similar research interests as yourself. The ASC conference has claims to be the biggest of its kind in the world with over 1 200 sessions and more than 4 000 delegates. Interestingly, besides various specialisation themed sessions, members of ASC have, over the years, established a number of interest groups (called 'divisions') (other than the standard ones on criminology, penology, victimology and policing) such as Corrections and Sentencing; Developmental Life-course Criminology; Experimental Criminology; International Criminology; Critical Criminology; Division on People of Color and Crime; Terrorism and Bias Crimes; and Women and Crime. Each division is then responsible for putting together specialisation themes falling under their broad specialisation field. This year interested persons made a start in launching a new division on Rural Criminology, which will hopefully be launched at the 2017 ASC conference to be held in Philadelphia in November 2017. Some of these divisions have also established division-affiliated journals to serve their specialisations, such as: Critical Criminology; Feminist Criminology; International Journal of Comparative & Applied Criminal Justice; Journal of Experimental Criminology; and Race and Justice. The ASC itself manages two journals, namely: Criminology: An interdisciplinary Journal and Criminology & Public Policy Journal. Interestingly, there is a standard annual ASC membership fee but you can also pay separate membership fees to as many divisions as you wish. (Note: 2017 ASC conference: 73rd American Society of Criminology. Theme: Crime, Legitimacy and Reform: Fifty Years after the President's Commission. Philadelphia, PA. 15-18 November 2017 (see www.asc41.com for more information on this conference).

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE, WARSAW UNIVERSITY, INSTITUTE OF SOCIAL PREVENTION AND RESOCIALIZATION, DEPARTMENT OF CRIMINOLOGY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE, 30-31 MARCH 2017, WARSZAWA, POLAND

Theme: Lifers in prison: The killers, the crime and punishment

The conference arose from the results of a study that was conducted since 2014 under the leadership of Prof A. Rzepliński. The primary aim(s) of the research was to conduct a criminological analysis of qualified murder, perpetrators of qualified murder and the administration of life imprisonment in its different phases from the perspectives of inmates, correctional personnel, families of both perpetrators and victims, criminal justice officials and the general public.

The objectives of the conference are as follows:

- To lay out the methodology and results of the research

- To hear from foreign researchers about their studies of lifers
- To open a platform for international cooperation of researchers of crimes, qualified murder perpetrators and life imprisonment

Day one - The position of a perpetrator of qualified murder, his/her crime as well as the reasons given for the punishment by judges.

Day two - Long-term imprisonment: Their administration, purposes, and strategies for the adaptation of prisoners to their endless punishment.

9TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE ASIAN CRIMINOLOGICAL SOCIETY AND THE 4TH BIENNIAL INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR CRIME, JUSTICE AND SOCIAL DEMOCRACY, 10-13 JULY 2017, CAIRNS, AUSTRALIA

POSTGRADUATE STUDENTS

The following postgraduate students graduated during the 2016 autumn graduation season:

DEPARTMENT OF SAFETY AND SECURITY MANAGEMENT, TSHWANE UNIVERSITY OF TECHNOLOGY

Maluleke, W. (2016). The use of Deoxyribonucleic Acid in combating stock theft in South Africa. DTech: Policing. (Supervisor: Prof J.T. Mofokeng).

ABSTRACT

Through his study Witness Maluleke showed that there was a dire need for the use of Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA) technology to combat stock theft in South Africa (SA). This study was confined to Bulwer, Ladysmith and Utrecht districts in the Kwa-Zulu Natal (KZN) Province. The findings highlighted challenges associated with the use of DNA to combat stock theft in SA in general specifically in the selected areas of the KZN Province. Through the research findings, it was shown that it is possible that the effective use of this forensic instrument can provide a positive and significant contribution to ensuring the safety and protection of livestock, as well as contributing positively to the economies of SA communities. Six (6) challenges and emerging themes were identified in this study, namely: (1) Common usage of conventional methods to combat stock theft; (2) Delay in obtaining DNA evidence feedback from the responsible laboratories; (3) Inadequate knowledge and application of the use of DNA technology; (4) Lack of capacity and resources to combat stock theft, (5) Insufficient methods and techniques to combat stock theft; and (6) Limited prioritisation of the stock theft scourge.

Based on the findings of this study, from both the data analysis from a literature review as well participants, the student recommended, among others, a conceptual framework encapsulating the best of strategies by integration of the conventional methods for combating stock theft with the use of Radio Frequency Identification (RFID), Wireless Fidelity (Wi-Fi), Wireless Sensor Network (WSN), ZigBee, DNA technology as well as the involvement of the relevant stakeholders. In essence, the developed conceptual framework consisted of five (5) components, namely: (1) Knowledge Management; (2) Available devices; (3) Preliminary investigation phases; (4) DNA technology analysis; and (5) Court procedures and conviction rates to be implemented towards combating stock theft in South Africa. It is envisaged that the findings of this study will be used to: (a) Understand the diverse experiences in conducting future research studies on the use of DNA technology against stock theft; (b) To create educational materials, or design future improvements and interventions systems; (c) To assist the South African Police Service (SAPS) and other relevant stakeholders in providing services related to combating stock theft; and (d) To inform further policies relating to the use of DNA technology.

DEPARTMENT OF CRIMINOLOGY & SECURITY SCIENCE, UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH AFRICA

Muza, P. Security measures employed in the mining industry: A case study of selected Zimbabwean gold mines (MTech in Security Management, UNISA, 2016) (Supervisor: Prof A. Minnaar. Co-supervisor: Prof C.J. Morrison)

ABSTRACT

The study was designed to examine the security measures employed in the gold mining industry at selected Zimbabwean gold mines. The purpose was to give a description of the security measures at the gold mines, assess their appropriateness and their sustainability in surveillance of the ever changing sophisticated targets. The research results indicated that a number of criminal cases were prevalent in the mines where offenders were targeting tools, machinery and processed and semi-processed gold. Despite the fact that the companies had both in-house and contracted security services, the study revealed that security was compromised mainly by poor working conditions, as well as the compensation system, for both mine workers and the security personnel. The conditions resulted in having unsustainable security measures being used. Major recommendations were that improvements were needed to working conditions, as well as the compensation system for both mine workers and security personnel. It was also identified that there was a need for more training of mine management, mine employees and contracted security companies on the Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED) and Crime Reduction Product Design (CRPD) with the replacement and introduction of new security measures to cope with technological advances, as well as the growing sophistication of offenders in the global village. However, the researcher also suggested that a closer look at the way the judiciary system can affectively complement the efforts of mining companies in ensuring sustainable security service provisions, needs to be made through further research.

Mokhuane, S.J. A security risk management approach to the prevention of theft of Platinum Group Metals: Case study of Impala Platinum mines and refinery. (MTech in Security Management, UNISA, 2016) (Supervisor: Prof A. Minnaar; Co-supervisor: Prof C.J. Morrison)

The purpose of this study was to establish the vulnerabilities of the security control measures that are being used at Impala Platinum mines and refinery to prevent theft of Platinum Group Metals (PGMs). It is important to ensure that the security control measures in place are effective and efficient in preventing the occurrence of theft. The research determines the security risk management approach to the prevention of theft of PGMs and the causes of theft of PGMs by organised crime syndicates operating in South Africa and abroad. The study found that Impala employees, in collusion with contractors and members of security services are involved in the theft of PGMs. To achieve the goals and objective of the research study, effective security control measures were identified that will help Impala Platinum mines and refinery to overcome the risks and challenges related to the theft of PGMs.
